Any fish that you happen to catch at the time when fishing is prohibited according to the table above must be immediately and carefully put back in the water where it was caught. In the spawning period from 16 April to 31 May inclusive, and during night fishing, you must put back each fish caught immediately and carefully into the water of origin. The use of fish (or parts thereof as bait) is prohibited from 1 March to 31 May inclusive.

Attention: the owner or water manager can impose local access rules so that fishing at certain points in time or fishing at certain places is not possible. In some waters you might also need an explicit permission from the owner to fish there.

Catch limitation, transport and keeping of fish

The use of a keepnet is prohibited in the interests of efficient enforcement of the rules on taking fish with you, transporting them and keeping them in your possession!

Fish > 15 cm: An angler may transport up to 5 dead fish larger than 15 cm, keep them in possession during angling or use them as bait fish. Only eel can be kept alive. For eel and pikeperch, the number is in addition limited to a maximum of 3. For example: if you already have 3 pikeperch and 1 roach, you may only keep 1 eel in your possession.

Bait fish $\leq$ 15 cm: An angler may use up to 20 bait fish smaller than or equal to 15 cm, transport them or keep them in possession during angling. A maximum of 5 live bait fish is permitted; the remaining bait fish must be dead.

PERMITTED FISH SPECIES

Only the fish species shown alongside may be transported, kept in possession during angling or used as bait fish. You must immediately and carefully put back any other fish species you catch into the water of origin.

- Live bait fish and live eel may only be stored and transported in a bucket or container filled with water.
- Keep in mind the sizes for fish species.
- From 16 April to 31 May inclusive, and during night fishing, you may not transport fish, keep them in your possession during angling, or use them as bait.

The fishing right

Rivers, canals and streams, as well as still or flowing waters that are not completely closed off from the public waterway network are all governed by the law of 1 July 1954 on river fishing and the decision of the Government of Flanders of 1 February 2013. With a Flemish fishing permit, everyone has the right to fish in the navigable waterways whose maintenance is paid for by the Flemish Region.

An additional permission is required for fishing in:

- The unnavigable waters where the fishing right belongs to the owner of the shore.
- The creeks and artificial waterways of which the maintenance is at the expense of Polders and Wateringen.
- The fishing waters to which the fisheries legislation applies, but which are on private land.

An additional permit or permission is required for fishing in:

Consumption advice

Because of the possible presence of polluting substances, the Government of Flanders strongly advises against eating fish you have caught yourself in public waters. Eating the fish could be a hazard to your health.

Code for lead use

Lead is a toxic metal and has no place in our environment. Lead is harmful for human and animal health. The government calls on all anglers to make as much use as possible of lead alternatives. Learn more about lead alternatives, practical tips and information for anglers:

Invasive alien species

Invasive alien species are non-native species that do not naturally occur here. They have arrived in our environment through human activities, spread rapidly, and cause damage and nuisance. Invasive alien species prey on native species, eat their food, invade their habitat, and spread diseases. They pose a major threat to our biodiversity.

This is how you, as an angler, can help to prevent the spread of alien species:

- Check immediately after angling, your fishing gear, boots, clothing and (belly) boat and remove plant material, aquatic animals and mud.
- Clean everything thoroughly with water, preferably on-site, otherwise at home.
- Dry your fishing gear and clothing completely before using them elsewhere.
- Do not use alien species as bait fish or as bait.
- Release all alien species in the water of origin after catching them. This prevents the propagation to other waters. Killing alien species you caught yourself is rarely an effective eradication method and has no effect on the population.
- Register your observations of alien species at waarnemingen.be/exoten, inaturalist.org or via the Obsidentify app.

The European Union has listed 114 invasive alien species of concern. In addition, there are other alien species that cause nuisance. Below are some examples.

topmouth gudgeon

pumpkinseed

round goby

marbled crayfish

white river crayfish

(northern) oriental weatherfish

black bullhead

Chinese mitten crab
